

The more that a program or classroom incorporates features of high-quality environments and recommended adult-child interactions, the greater the likelihood that serious challenging behaviors will be prevented.